ON CLASSICAL LITERATURE.

PHILOLOGUS, No. II.

Read Homer care, and you can read no more.
For all homer else appear in mean, in poor,
Verbe will seem poor but still peris to read,
And homer will be all the poet you need.

DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.

The Latin authors are full of unknown excellence—The Roman historians are the best that ever existed.

GODWIN.

HAVING in the preceding number made a few observations on the morality of the ancient classics, I next proceed to say something of their literary merit compared with that of the moderns. And, here, was I possessed of the penetrating wit, and satirical humour of a Swift, I might draw up the ancient and modern armies in battle array, marshal the literary troops, and lead them on to the mighty conflict, "shield to shield, and lance to lance opposed." But as I have neither genius nor inclination for martial description, I shall content myself with discussing the subject as briefly as possible.

The ancients have heretofore been universally considered as the best models for imitation in history, oratory, and poetry; and I must acknowledge; I have never yet met with any reasons advanced, of sufficient weight, to incline me to think the general admiration misplaced. The reputation of such writers as Homer, Virgil, Demosthenes and Cicero, notwithstanding the furious attacks of some upstart Goths and tattlefals Vandals, is established upon a foundation firm and immovable as a rock of adamant. Amidst all the vicissitudes of human affairs—while other empires fall around, and the wrecks of time strike the traveller with astonishment, these immortal productions shall still stand towering towards heaven, as eternal monuments of ancient genius.

Their celebrity must be the necessary consequence of their intrinsic worth; because it depends on the almost universal taste of mankind, for the space of more than eighteen centuries. Imperfections are, indeed, discoverable in their works, passages faulty and even puerile may be found in their writings; but these, when we consider the countless number of their superlative beauties, are swallowed up as a drop of water in the immense ocean. There is an argument in favour of these distinguished writers, almost equal to a mathematical demonstration;—they perfectly accord with the common standard of human nature: their works being only a transcript of nature's page, must therefore, be no less perennial than creation itself. They impress the general feelings of mankind almost as forcibly as the immediate voice of nature herself. In matters of taste where lies the appeal? Where is the criterion? Where is the standard, and where the grand tribunal to which we must apply for a decisive judgment? Not alone the professors of schools and universities—not to the abstruse speculative philosopher; nor the dry abstract metaphysician; but to the common feelings and sentiments of mankind. These have, certainly, been long enough consulted on the subject of classical merit. They have been appealed to not for a few years only; but for many centuries, and throughout all republics, states, and kingdoms, where the rays of science have in any degree dispelled the darkness of barbarism; nor humiliated the savage breast. The natural simplicity, energy and pathos of those imper-eminent authors, which have impressed as a faith of ethereal fire have, diffused along the nerves, and warmed the human heart, in every age; in consequence of which effects constantly produced by the same cause, they have declared their sentence, pronounced the verdict and given their united sanction to the works of superior genius.

"In matters of mere reasoning, says a very judicious critic, the world may be long in an error, and may be convinced of the error by stronger reasoning when produced. For this reason a system of philosophy receives no sufficient sanction from its antiquity or long currency."—Old theories may be exploded and new ones adopted in their stead.—But in works of taste there can be no such vicissitudes, their dependence is not upon the progress five improvement of science; but upon the natural formation of the human mind, which, making allowances for the difference of culture, is invariably the same in all the sons and daughters of Adam. In matters of taste, therefore, the world are not liable to be imposed on, as in the intricate mazes of philosophic speculation. That "the universal feeling of mankind, is the natural feeling; consequently the right feeling" is no less periphrastic than, that all the three angles of a triangle taken together are equal to two right angles.—But some person may here object, and ask, is the public never deceived? Does it never pass a wrong judgment on a poetical, or rhetorical composition? To this I answer, it can never be long imposed upon. "This true a very paltry performance, when it coincides with the interests and prejudices of a party; or flatters any prevailing vice or folly, and agrees with the humours and inclinations of the populace, or of a demagogue whose opinions they respect, may be for some time in vogue, and even supplant a work of much greater merit; but this fondness is never lasting; for, as soon as the zeal and enthusiastic fervor of passion subsides, a work without sufficient merit to support it, falls down to its proper place.—"To dumb oblivions's ever desert shade." Besides such a performance is esteemed, or celebrated in only one nation or country: it can never obtain a general currency in different countries, among nations of different manners, customs and genius; its reputation is only local and temporary; never extensive and permanent.

The subject of the comparative merit of the ancients and moderns have already been discussed, by several late writers, in so masterly a manner, that to those who wish to form a full estimate of ancient composition, I particularly recommend the perusal of them. The authors to whom I particularly allude are, Blair, Knox, and Godwin, who, for correctness of judgment, liberality and refinement of sentiment, perspicuity and elegance of language, justly claim a distinguished rank among the writers of the present age.—My design in this place, is only to offer a few remarks on those parts of the subject, which have been but little insisted on by preceding writers.—In general, when we compare the writings of the ancients with those of the moderns, we are struck with the following characteristic difference. On the side of the ancients we generally discover more sublime conceptions, greater simplicity, more vigor and strength of imagination, & greater fertility of genius. On the part of the moderns, we commonly perceive more art, more correctness, greater refinement; but less originality.—This rule is not without its particular exceptions.—Shakespeare seems to have drawn his inspiration from the purest fountain of nature—he is a strong, bold, nervous writer, full of sublime and noble sentiments.—But amidst the greatest beauties, so many irregularities, low conceits, gross blunders, coarse and vulgar expressions, occur so frequently as to leave the reader in doubt whether his uncommon excellencies on the one side are not more than counterbalanced by his glaring deformities on the other.

In poetry, eloquence and history, the ancients have greatly the superiority. But in natural philosophy and all sciences the knowledge of which is progressive, we have undoubtedly gained some advantages as these things cannot be brought to perfection but by long and continued experience.—In epic poetry, Homer shines as yet unrivalled. In simplicity, invention, native fire and impetuosity, he excels all other poets. Among the moderns, Milton is commonly placed in the front, and is indeed, a poet of surpassing genius, of astonishing sublimity, and extraordinary strength and richness of imagination.—In fertility of invention he yields to none but Homer.—His machinery however is far inferior to that of the ancient poet. The English bard discovers, perhaps, more art and refinement of thought; the Grecian poet more nature. The verification of the former is often affected, harsh, and turgid; the flowing numbers, and melodious verse of the latter, are grateful even to the ears of those who are ignorant of the Greek language. Some transcendental other poets, in sublime scenes, and particularly in describing martial achievements, and also in a proper display of characters. In these respects, Milton, as an epic poet, is very deficient. His allegorical personages, Death and Sin are inadmissible in a good epic poem. Indeed according to the strict rules of criticism, it cannot be called an epic poem at all. If Adam be the hero, the poem is very ill conducted, for it terminates very unfortunately. It is certainly very unnatural, as well as contrary to poetic justice, to leave a virtuous character, after struggling with a variety of misfortunes, in a state of wretchedness. If Adam be not the hero then (as Mr. Dryden observes) the Devil must be the hero, for he is the best supported character in the whole poem, and gains a triumph over Adam and all his posterity; for I presume no friend of the poet will venture to mention his Paradise Regained, as it would only disgrace the author to compare that with the Iliad. Besides, when we consider the early period in which Homer wrote, in which he could have no proper model or pattern for imitation; and that Milton frequently borrows both from Homer and Virgil, many passages being almost literally copied from the ancient poets; and that he makes a constant use of the heathen mythology as conducting to the beauty of his poetry—these things, I say, being considered, we may safely conclude, without detracting in the least from the real character of the prince of the English poets, that he must be content, without daring to encounter the noble Grecian bard. I will, however, admit, that in a few instances he equals Homer; but then, in many other respects, he is far inferior even to Virgil.—The rules of epic poetry, says the modern cavalier, were originally drawn from Homer, and must therefore be in his favour. Why were they taken from Homer, I ask? was it not because his writings were perfectly agreeable to nature, as a celebrated modern poet observes,

"But when to examine every part he came,
Nature and Homer were he found the same."

Let an impartial and candid critic (if such a thing can be found) compare the orations of Demosthenes and Cicero, with the most applauded specimens of oratory that have been delivered in modern times, & he must necessarily acknowledge, that instead of having excelled, they have fallen considerably short of equalling those two ancient orators.

It will readily be granted, that republican governments afford the best opportunities for displaying eloquence. For the most energetic, animated, persuasive, & pathetic orations among the moderns, we must, therefore, look to France and America, where we will find several orations, that discover a high degree of that daring, masculine spirit and enthusiastic ardor which once prevailed in the famous republics of Greece and Rome. But yet I can by no means allow that any of them are superior to those of Demosthenes and Cicero.—Nobility I hear some person exclaim.—Is it not bigoted to be attached to those old authors? What were the ancients that we should extol them so highly? Were they a race of men superior to the moderns? Or were the climates of Greece and Rome peculiarly favourable to the production of genius?—To such hasty enquiries, I recommend the consideration of the three following circumstances.—1. That the ancient Greeks and Romans possessed a remarkably enterprising spirit, which for a long time displayed itself in an invincible and almost incredible ardor for military pursuits; and that when the same spirit was directed, with equal enthusiasm, into the channel of literature, it could scarce fail of being equally successful.—2. The extreme attention, and indefatigable industry which those distinguished writers, employed not only in composing, but in correcting & polishing their works, was also a circumstance which contributed, in a great measure to their immortality.—"All the performances of human art, says the celebrated Dr. Johnson, at which we look with praise or wonder, are instances of the restless force of perseverance: it is by this, that the quarry becomes a pyramid, and that distant countries are united by canals."—3. Another circumstance of great importance, was the liberal and unparalleled encouragements given to those who distinguished themselves in the noble pursuits of literature.—When do we hear in modern times of a poet receiving two thousand pounds for sixteen or twenty lines?—Pecuniary rewards were not the only incentives to genius;—honours, preferments, and above all, the extraordinary veneration in which they were held by their countrymen, were most powerful stimulents to emulation.—fanned the flame of genius—invigorated every exertion—and inspired their panting souls with an unquenchable thirst for immortal fame. Far be it from me to depreciate the noble productions of the moderns, or to deprecate the aspiring spirit of any American youth whose breast breaths forth high with a glorious emulation,—whose manly soul indignant bursts from the barriers, and rushes towards the goal with heart elate, and rends asunder the shakles which the frozen-hearted critic would impose. For his encouragement, the book of nature still lies open, and spreads its ample folio, as replete as ever with the richest stores.—Though a Homer and a Virgil have with unexampled assiduity, employed their lives in the perusal, how many pages fraught with golden instruction yet remain untured.—May we not wish superior splendour, from the embowering forests of Columbia?—We are however indebted to the ancients for the greatest part of the learning, as well as scientific knowledge we have at present amongst us. If we have in several branches of learning made considerable improvements, and in many respects, extended the limits of science, do these modern improvements entirely supercede the necessity of our being acquainted with them in their original state? Had not the classics been preserved during the dark and Gothic ages, in what condition should we now have been? Most probably groping in the heightened darkness of barbarism, and as devoid of the illuminating rays of science as the Turks and Tartars. Do we not then owe them a tribute of reverence and gratitude for the flock of knowledge with which they have furnished us? Certainly the least compliment we can pay them, is to read their works.—What can render the classic writings less amiable in our eyes, than in those of our ancestors? Is it because we have already stripped them of all their graces to adorn our own compositions, and do we act, in this respect, as a debauchee who when his appetite is satiated, and his desires obtained by fraudulent seduction, abandons his fair innocent, no longer dwells with rapture on her charms, but leaves her to the mercy of a calumniating world. Is the modern taste so vitiated? Are mankind become too effeminate to relish the beauties of a solid and manly eloquence?—I entertain too high an opinion of the republican spirit of my fellow citizens, to suppose that men, who in their ever memorable struggle for liberty, displayed such uncommon fortitude and firmness, should ever become so degenerate, as to prefer the meretricious ornaments, quaint and affected phrases of several modern writers, to the elegant simplicity, animated language, and masculine beauties of the ancient classics.

We may further remark, that those among the moderns, who have purified the footsteps of the ancients and imitated them the most closely, have succeeded the best & arrived the nearest to perfection; as Milton, Dryden, Pope, Addison, Swift, Bolingbroke, Shaftesbury, Montesquieu, Boileau, Cambray, Voltaire, Rousseau, with many others of equal eminence. Scarce a single instance can be produced in modern times, of any eminent poet, orator, historian, or thinking character in any department of literature, who was not a classical scholar, and who has not strongly recommended the careful perusal of the ancient writers, to all his successors who should afterwards aspire to eminence. 'Tis true, in the United States of America, where a general dissemination of political knowledge has for some time, prevailed, two or three extraordinary geniuses have arisen, animated with an enthusiastic love for liberty, who "lored above the critic's law," & delivered orations worthy of Greece or Rome. Yet these great characters, though, perhaps, but little acquainted with the original languages, were fondly enamoured of the Greek and Roman histories, read them in translations with uncommon avidity, stored their memories with useful facts, and thence caught that noble fire which burst forth in patriotic flames.—But even in this case, to assert that such men were nothing indebted to classical learning, would be false and absurd. They conversed with the polished, critical scholars of the age—they read and doubted the works of classical scholars, as in fact, they could hardly find any other writing worthy of their attention, and by their efforts the taste was regulated, & their style improved.—The classic writings having been, from the very dawn of literature in modern Europe, esteemed the only models of true taste, have been imitated with such success, that a very great portion of their beauties have been borrowed, and have contributed in a great degree to enrich and adorn, not only the English language; but those of every other civilized nation. Hence it is, that a modern wit, with great applause, frequently delivers as his own, a thought, turn or expression of Horace or Cicero, unadmired by his auditors, or even by himself.—So even admitting that the moderns have in some instances, improved upon the ancient stock, by copying their beauties, and avoiding their faults; yet still the greater share of the glory redounds to the original authors. In the same manner, the inventors of the art of printing, do still retain the chief honor; though great improvements have since been made in the typographical art.—The case is the same with respect to the mariners compass, the invention of gun-powder, the discovery of unknown countries &c.—I though great additions have been made to the discovery of Columbus, he still retains the honorable appellation of the Discoverer of the New World. So, whatever merit the moderns claim above the ancients, still the praise of originality belongs to the latter, as what the moderns are, the ancients made them to be. In short we may compare both to the two great luminaries of the firmament,—the ancients like the sun, shine with native and unborrowed rays, the moderns as the moon, shine only by reflection.

FRENCH REPUBLIC.

In the tribunate, in the sitting of March 6, the President read a letter from citizen Maret, Secretary of State, which informed the tribunate that the government was about to send a messenger from the council of state to communicate to them a new proclamation to the French, and two orders which had been issued.

After some time citizen Champagne was introduced in that capacity.

"Government, (said he,) always anxious to unite with you in whatever interest the prosperity and glory of the Republic, think it their duty to communicate to you their arrangements in circumstances so important as the present.

"The campaign is on the point of being opened; this is sufficient to inform you that peace is about to be made, either by the mere flow of war, or by the success by which it will be crowned. Have no doubt on this subject citizens Tribunes.

"Peace is incessantly the object of anxious solicitude with the present government. They desire it; they promise it to the French people; they have offered it to the collected powers; if the latter, deaf to the voice of humanity and reason, persist in refusing it, the republic will prove to them that though the is desirous of peace, she knows how to make war.

"Government have charged me to communicate the arrangements which they have made to begin, and carry on the war. It is they who speak, and in the proclamation addressed you will recognize the sentiments which animate, and the genius which inspires them." The orator here read the proclamation in these words:

PROCLAMATION Of the Consul of the Republic to the French.

FRENCHMEN,

"You are desirous of peace; your government are desirous of it with still greater ardour. Their first wishes, their persevering measures, have been for peace. The English administration repels it; the English administration has betrayed the secret of its horrible policy. To ravage France, to destroy her marine and her ports, to efface her from the map of Europe, or to degrade her to the rank of secondary power; to keep all the nations of the continent divided, in order to get possession of the commerce of all, and to enrich herself by their spoils; it is to obtain these frightful successes that England is prodigal of gold, profuse of promises and that she multiplies intrigues.

But neither the gold, nor the promises, nor the intrigues of England, will change so her views the powers of the continent.

They have heard the wish of France, they know the moderation of the principles that guide her; they will listen to the voice of their interest.

"Were it otherwise, the government, which has not feared to offer, and solicit peace, will remember that it is for you to command it. To command it we must have money, iron and soldiers.

"Let all make haste to pay the tribute which they owe to the common defence; let the young citizens march. It is no longer for factions—it is no longer for the choice of tyrants, that they are going to arm; it is for the guarantee of all that is most dear to them: it is for the honor of France; it is for the sacred interests of humanity and liberty. Already have the armies resumed that attitude, the promise and the preface of victory; at the sight of them; at the sight of the whole nation united in the same wishes, do not doubt, Frenchmen, that you will have no more enemies on the continent. The first consul has promised peace; he will go and conquer it at the head of those warriors whom he has more than once led to victory. With them he will know how to find again those fields still full of the remembrance of their exploits; yet in the midst of battle, he will still invoke peace, and he will swear to fight only for the happiness of France, and repose of the world!"

ELIZABETHTOWN, May 13.

From the N. Y. Mercantile Advertiser.
We this day continue our selection from London and Glasgow papers, to the 10th March, received at the office of the Mercantile Advertiser. From the situation of the Elbe, and the consequent interruption of the intercourse between England and that part of the continent which includes the empire of Germany, our accounts are necessarily French.—Many important occurrences, it may therefore be presumed, are yet unknown to us; and many of the facts which have come to our knowledge, are doubtless ironed by misrepresentation; but they are given to our readers exactly in the same state in which they were received by us.

We hinted yesterday, that the most vigorous preparations were making for opening the campaign in Europe; and we this day give ample details of those preparations. The contending parties seem eager to cry "Havoc," and let slip the dogs of war." One of our London paragraphists states that "the measures adopted on the part of France, are distinguished by that promptitude and energy which are to be expected from a government so concentrated, so powerful, and (it might perhaps, be added) so popular as that of the consulate. The desire of peace, he adds, is however, still heard in the midst of these immense preparations; negotiations, it is stated continue to be carried on with the cabinet of Vienna; and the remarkable expression in Buonaparte's answer to the orators of their tribunate, cannot escape the notice of our readers. Every hope of continental peace has not yet vanished."

Dijon, the chief town of the department of Cote d'Or, where 60,000 men are to be assembled under the immediate command of the first consul, is a position excellently chosen for an army of reserve. Its situation is central, between Savoy and the Rhine; and the troops collected there may be forwarded with equal facility to either of the frontiers on which the Austrians may appear in most considerable force.

The Vienna Gazette announces that the Ottoman Porte has declared to the house of Austria its intention to conclude a peace with the French republic.

APPOINTMENTS BY AUTHORITY.
John Marshall, esq. of Virginia, secretary of state, in the place of Timothy Pickens, esq. removed.

Samuel Dexter, esq. of Massachusetts, secretary of the department of War, in the place of John Marshall, esq. promoted to the office of state.

Irafil Whelen, esq. of Pennsylvania, purveyor of public supplies for the United States, in the place of Trench Francis, esq. deceased.

William Henry Harrison, esq. delegate to congress from the North-Western territory, to be governor of the Indiana territory.

Gen. John Gibson, of Pennsylvania, secretary of the Indiana territory.

Charles Lee now attorney general of the United States, has been appointed to execute the duties of the secretary of state, until the present vacancy shall be filled.

The house of representatives of the United States adjourned yesterday to the third Monday in November next, then to meet at the city of Wallington, in the district of Columbia.

It appears that the latest English papers that the emperor of Germany is dangerously ill; and that the Chouans are again in force, and have cut off the communications between Breff and Paris.

Yesterday arrived at the Fort, the brig Eliza, from Leghorn. Previous to the Eliza's sailing, it was reported that lord Nelson, had captured a French 80 gun ship, and three other force ships, with 3000 troops on board, going into Malta. The Colleen, 74, commodore Trowbridge, received several hit in her hull, in cutting off the vessels, but no lives lost.

The siege of Genoa still continued—the Austrians blockading it by land, and the British by sea.

Lexington, June 12.

About the tenth instant, two Indians came into the settlement on Flinn creek, above Fort Blount, and stole two horses; they were pursued by six men till they came near Tennessee river, when four of their horses gave out; the other two followed on to the river, where they discovered the Indians, fired on them, killed one and wounded the other. The pursuers recovered their horses and returned home.

We understand, that through the mediation of capt. Lewis, the difference between the Cherokees and Chickasaws (as mentioned in a former paper) is amicably settled.

BY LAST EVENING'S MAIL.

PHILADELPHIA, May 12.

Captain Steward's Certificate.

I JAMES STEWARD, of Catham, in the county of Middlesex, of lawful age, &c. present the following facts to the public view. That on the 4th of April, 1800, I arrived at New-London from Jamaica, in the brig Sally; that the British capture the American vessels that afford the lightest pretences for condemnation, and impudently I was taken by a French privateer; they took out all my people except a boy and myself: I was retaken by the Acafo of forty-four guns, a British ship, commanded by Captain Edward Fellows, who came on board the Sally himself, ordered my chest open, and with his own hands took out of it 1250 dollars, and ordered one of his people to take about 200 oranges, (being all I had) for himself, and carried them away: the people plundered the cabin and stowage of other articles—Captain Nathan Allen, of Gorton, had all his people imprefred with their protections in their hands, Captain Waterman of New-York was treated in the same manner, with many others; and Mr. Savage the American agent at Kingston, informed me that he had forwarded to the secretary of offit, by commodore Truxton, an attested list of the names of one thousand and one American seamen, who had been imprefred by the British in that single port. American vessels and cargoes were constantly condemned in that place. One captain and one supercargo of condemned vessels came home with me. I was treated myself with personal abuse by the British officers. An officer of one of their ships went on board a brig, Capt. Castle, from Bolton, and flogged the centinel for hailing his boat in the night. This last account I had from Captain Castle. And farther the deponent faith not.

Sec. 42. And be it further enacted, That where it shall appear to the said commissioners that there hath been mutual credit given by the bankrupt, and any other person, or mutual debts between them at any time before such person became bankrupt, the assignee or assignees of the estate shall state the account between them, and one debt may be set off against the other, and what shall appear to be due on either side on the balance of such account after such set off, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively.

Off-sets to be allowed.

Sec. 43. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful to and for the assignee or assignees of any bankrupt's estate and effects, under the direction of the commissioners, and by and with the consent of the major part in value of such of the said bankrupt's creditors, as shall have duly proved their debts under the commission, and shall be present at any meeting of the said creditors, to be held in pursuance of due and public notice for that purpose given, to submit any difference or dispute for, on account, or by reason or means of, any matter, cause or thing whatsoever, relating to such bankrupt, or to his or her estate or effects, to the final end and determination of arbitrators to be chosen by the said commissioners, and the major part in value of such creditors as shall be present at such meeting as aforesaid, and the party or parties with whom they shall have such difference or dispute, and to perform the award of such arbitrators, or otherwise to compound and agree the matter in difference and dispute as aforesaid, in such manner as the said assignee or assignees under the direction and with the consent aforesaid, shall think fit and can agree: and the same shall be binding on the several creditors of the said bankrupt, and the said assignee or assignees are hereby indemnified for what they shall fairly do according to the directions aforesaid.

Assignees may, with consent of the commissioners, &c. agree to a reference or compromise.

Sec. 44. And be it further enacted, That the assignees shall be, and hereby are vested with full power to, dispose of all the bankrupt's estate real and personal at public auction or vendue, without being subject to any tax, duty, imposition, or restriction any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Bankrupt's estate may be disposed of at public auction, without paying duty, &c.

Sec. 45. And be it further enacted, That if after any commission of bankruptcy, sued forth, the bankrupt happen to die before the commissioners shall have distributed the effects, or any part thereof, the commissioners shall, nevertheless, proceed to execute the commission, as fully as they might have done if the party were living.

What is to be done if the bankrupt die, pending the proceeding.

Sec. 46. And be it further enacted, That where any commission of bankruptcy shall be delivered to the commissioners, therein named, to be executed, it shall and may be lawful for them before they take the oath or affirmation of qualification, to demand and take from the creditor, or creditors prosecuting such commission, a bond with one good security, if required, in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses, which shall arise and accrue upon the prosecution of the said commission: Provided always, That the expenses, so as aforesaid to be secured and paid by the petitioning creditor or creditors, shall be repaid to him or them by the commissioners or assignees, out of the first monies arising from the bankrupt's estate or effects, if so much be received therefrom.

Commissioners may demand security for the expenses of the commission.

District judge to fix the compensation to the commissioners.

Sec. 47. And be it further enacted, That the district judges, in each district respectively, shall fix a rate of allowance to be made to the commissioners of bankruptcy, as compensation of services to be rendered under the commission, and it shall be lawful for any creditor, by petition to the district judge, to except to any charge contained in the account of the commissioners: And the said judge, after hearing the commissioners, may in a summary way decide upon the validity of such exception.

Penalties how recovered and appropriated.

Sec. 48. And be it further enacted, That all penalties, given by this act for the benefit of the creditors, shall be recovered by the assignee or assignees by action of debt, and the money so recovered, the charges of suit being deducted, shall be distributed towards payment of the creditors.

General issue and double costs provided for defendants who acted under the commission

Sec. 49. And be it further enacted, That if any action shall be brought against any commissioner, or assignee, or other person, having authority under the commission, for any thing done or performed by force of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence; and in case of a non-suit, discontinuance, or verdict or judgment for him, he shall recover double costs.

Property coming to the bankrupt, before he obtains a certificate, to be vested in the commissioners.

Sec. 50. And be it further enacted, That if any estate real or personal shall descend, revert to, or become vested in any person, after he or she shall be declared a bankrupt, and before he or she shall obtain a certificate, signed by the judge as aforesaid, all such estate shall, by virtue of this act, be vested in the said commissioners, and shall be by them assigned and conveyed to the assignee or assignees in fee simple, or otherwise, in like manner as above directed, with the estate of the said bankrupt, at the time of the bankruptcy, and the proceeds thereof shall be divided among the creditors.

Proceedings of the commissioners to be filed in the office of the clerk of the district, &c.

Sec. 51. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall, once in every year, carefully file in the clerk's office of the district court, all the proceedings had in every case before them, and which shall have been finished, including the commissions, examinations, dividends, entries, and other determinations of the said commissioners, in which office, the final certificate of the said bankrupt may also be recorded; all which proceedings shall remain of record in the said office, and certified copies thereof shall be admitted as evidence in all courts in like manner as the copies of the proceedings of the said district court are admitted in other cases.

Creditors may attend the examinations of the bankrupt and the allowance of the certificate.

Sec. 52. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for any creditor of such bankrupt, to attend all or any of the examinations of said bankrupt, and the allowance of the final certificate, if he shall think proper, and then and there to propose interrogatories, to be put by the judge or commissioners to the said bankrupt and others, and also to produce and examine witnesses and documents before such judge or commissioners, relative to the subject matter before them. And in case either the bankrupt or creditor shall think him or herself aggrieved by the determination of the said judge or commissioners, relative to any material fact, in the commencement or progress of the said proceedings, or in the allowance of the certificate aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for either party to petition the said judge setting forth such facts and the determination thereon, with the complaint of the party, and a prayer for trial by a jury to determine the same, and the said judge shall, in his discretion, make order thereon, and award a venire facias to the marshal of the district, returnable within fifteen days before him, for the trial of the facts mentioned in the said petition, notice whereof shall be given to the commissioners and creditors concerned in the same; at which time the said trial shall be had, unless, on good cause shewn, the judge shall give farther time, and judgment being entered on the verdict of the jury, shall be final, on the said facts, and the judge or commissioners shall proceed agreeably thereto.

Trial by jury may be had in relation to certain facts.

Sec. 53. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners before the appointment of assignees, and the assignees after such appointment, may from time to time make such allowance out of the bankrupt's estate until he shall have obtained his final discharge, as in their opinion may be requisite for the necessary support of the said bankrupt and his family.

Allowance to the bankrupt, pending the proceedings.

Sec. 54. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the major part in value of the creditors, before they proceed to the choice of assignees, to direct in what manner, with whom, and where the monies arising by, and to be received from time to time out of the bankrupt's estate, shall be lodged, until the same shall be divided among the creditors, as herein provided; to which direction every such assignee and assignees shall conform as often as three hundred dollars shall be received.

Creditors may direct where the money shall be deposited

Sec. 55. And be it further enacted, That every matter and thing by this act, required to be done by the commissioners of any bankrupt, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, if performed by a majority of them.

Majority of the commissioners may act.

Sec. 56. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the assignees shall prosecute any debtor of the bankrupt for any debt, duty or demand, the commission, or a certified copy thereof, and the assignment of the commissioners of the bankrupt's estate, shall be conclusive evidence of the issuing the commission, and of the person named therein, being a trader and bankrupt, at the time mentioned therein.

The commission shall be evidence of the party being a bankrupt, &c.

Sec. 57. And be it further enacted, That every person obtaining a discharge from his debts, by certificate as aforesaid, granted under a commission, of bankruptcy, shall not, on any future commission, be entitled to any other certificate than a discharge of his person only; unless the nett proceeds of the estate and effects of such person so becoming bankrupt a second time, shall be sufficient to pay seventy-five per cent, to his or her creditors on the amount of their debts respectively.

Effect of a discharge under a second commission.

Claims of creditors may be tried by jury.

Sec. 58. And be it further enacted, That any creditor of a person, against whom a commission of bankruptcy shall have been sued forth, and who shall lay his claim before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of this act, may at the same time declare his unwillingness to submit the same to the judgment of the said commissioners, and his wish that a jury may be impannelled to decide thereon: And in like manner the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt may object to the consideration of any particular claim by the commissioners, and require that the same should be referred to a jury. In either case, such objection and request shall be entered on the books of the commissioners, and thereupon an issue shall be made up between the parties, and a jury shall be impannelled, as in other cases, to try the same in the circuit court for the district in which such bankrupt has usually resided. The verdict of such jury shall be subject to the controul of the court, as in suits originally instituted in the said court, and when rendered, if not set aside by the court, shall be certified to the commissioners, and shall ascertain the amount of any such claim, and such creditor or creditors shall be considered in all respects as having proved their debts under the commission.

Bankrupt's estate may be sold on credit.

Sec. 59. And be it further enacted, That the lands and effects of any person becoming bankrupt may be sold on such credit, and on such security, as a major part in value of the creditors may direct: Provided, nothing herein contained shall be allowed so to operate, as to retard the granting the bankrupt's certificate.

Creditors or commissioners may release the bankrupt
from prison, and the former may in-sue a new execution if he does not obtain a discharge.

Sec. 60. And be it further enacted, That if any person becoming bankrupt, shall be in prison, it shall be lawful for any creditor or creditors, at whose suit he or she shall be in execution, to discharge him or her from custody, or if such creditor or creditors shall refuse to do so, the prisoner may petition the commissioners to liberate him or her, and thereupon, if, in the opinion of the commissioners, the conduct of such bankrupt shall have been fair, so as to entitle him or her in their opinion, to a certificate, when by law such certificate might be given, it shall be lawful for them to direct the discharge of such prisoner, and to enter the same in their books, which being notified to the keeper of the gaol in which such prisoner may be confined, shall be a sufficient authority for his or her discharge: Provided, That in either case, such discharge shall be no bar to another execution, if a certificate shall be refused to such bankrupt: And provided also, That it shall be no bar to a subsequent imprisonment of such bankrupt by order of the commissioners, in conformity with the provisions of this act.

this act shall affect the insolvent laws of the states.

Sec. 61. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not repeal or annul, or be construed to repeal or annul the laws of any state now in force, or which may be hereafter enacted, for the relief of insolvent debtors, except so far as the same may respect persons, who are, or may be clearly within the purview of this act, and whose debts shall amount in the cases specified in the second section thereof to the sums therein mentioned. And if any person within the purview of this act shall be imprisoned for the space of three months, for any debt, or upon any contract, unless the creditors of such prisoner shall proceed to prosecute a commission of bankruptcy against him or her, agreeably to the provisions of this act, such debtor may and shall be entitled to relief, under any such laws for the relief of insolvent debtors, this act notwithstanding.

Sec. 62. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this law shall, in any manner affect the right of preference to prior satisfaction of debts due to the United States as secured or provided by any law heretofore passed, nor shall be construed to lessen or impair any right to, or security for, money due to the United States or to any of them.

Saving of the rights of the U. S. and of each State as to their debts.

Sec. 63. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken, or construed to invalidate, or impair any lien existing at the date of this act, upon the lands or chattels of any person who may have become a bankrupt.

Saving of existing liens.

Sec. 64. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force during the term of five years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer : Provided, That the expiration of this act shall not prevent the complete execution of any commission which may have been previously thereto issued.

Limitation of this act,
